

Open call

Lewisham Music are looking for creators (that's everyone) to take part in Black History Music, our digital exploration and celebration of black music.

Black History Month is dedicated to celebrating and learning about Black heritage. As part of Black History Month (and beyond) this year we're embarking on a new digital project called Black History Music, an open call for creators (you) to send us audio/video recordings performing/re-creating/remixing/reimagining your favourite tracks inspired by black music to feature in our digital exploration and celebration of black music history which we will combine as a listening/watching project next year.

The aim is to actively encourage exploration, discovery, and re-discovery of black music, and to inspire everyone to create.

Whether you want to send us a cover of your favourite track, your own remix, a classical interpretation of a dub classic, or mash up a jazz rhythm on Logic - we want you to be inspired and to challenge yourself.

We want EVERYONE to get involved, from the bedroom beat makers, to the chord shredders, to the bar spitters, harmony makers and everyone in between. If you've never picked up an instrument or unleashed some vocals, it doesn't matter, now is your time! Get together with friends, go solo, incorporate into your music lessons, take any opportunity.

How to get involved...

Send us your video/audio recordings and you will feature in Black History Music, just head to the link below for more information and some inspiration...
